Question 1

Study the following source material and then answer the questions which follow.

Source A From the memoirs of Erich Ebermeyer, describing the 'Day of Potsdam', 21 March 1933

Then Hitler speaks. Out of the party leader, the fanatic and agitator, a true statesman seems to be developing. The Government's declaration is marked by notable moderation. Not a word of hatred for the opposition, not a word of racial ideology, not a threat aimed at home or abroad. Hitler says only what the audience
 5 wants to hear: the continuation of the great traditions of our nation and the firmness of government. No one can escape the emotion of the moment; Father, too, is deeply impressed; Mother has tears in her eyes.

Source B Wilhelm Hoegner, a Bavarian SPD deputy, describing events at the Kroll Opera House when the new Reichstag assembled on 24 March 1933

The wide square in front of the Kroll Opera House was crowded with dark masses of people. We were received with wild choruses of 'We want the Enabling Act!' Youths with swastikas on their chests eyed us insolently, blocking our way, calling us names like 'Centre pig', 'Marxist sow'. The Kroll Opera House was crawling with armed SA
 5 and SS men. In the cloakroom we learned that Severing, an SPD leader, had been arrested on entering the building. When we Social Democrats had taken our seats on the extreme left, SA and SS men lined up at the exits and along the walls behind us in a semi-circle. Their expressions boded no good.

Source C The events of March 1933 reveal the dual nature of the Nazi state at its beginning. The Weimar constitution technically remained in force, subject to the modifications introduced by the Decree for the Protection of People and State, and the Enabling Act. Much government business was still conducted according to normal
 5 procedures. This was important, for while many of the government's supporters shared its aversion to parliamentary democracy, not all were eager to abandon the rule of law entirely. On the other hand, the new political order the Nazis wanted could neither be established nor maintained without the 'exceptional measures' that characterised the 'national revolution' during the spring of 1933. These measures
 10 included arbitrary arrest and imprisonment, violence and torture, and summary justice and execution.
