Source C Luther's attack on the Papacy found an immediate response among the German people. Luther was a superb communicator. Not only did he preach well over 2 000 sermons, he also used the newly established printing press to spread his ideas. During his lifetime his works went through 5 nearly 4 000 editions and the use of visual illustrations proved particularly important in carrying his message to the common people, many of whom were illiterate. With a pen as sharp as his tongue, Luther was never slow to reply to his critics. His crude use of propaganda and earthy language go some way to explaining his appeal. Wittenberg became the centre of 10 Lutheranism and many of the university students became enthusiastic preachers.

Adapted from G WOODWARD, The Development of Early Modern Europe 1480–1648, 1997
